The next four years will be pivotal in our province’s history and my pledge as Premier is that we will work to ensure that Newfoundland and Labrador continues to grow and prosper as together we aim to reach the full measure of our magnificent potential.”

The Premier said that all members of the caucus recognize the responsibility and honour of serving the people of Newfoundland and Labrador.

Premier Dunderdale noted today that she has reduced the size of Cabinet from 19 to 16 members, in line with her government's commitment to efficiency and prudent spending throughout government. This action necessitated some departmental re-alignments.

"It is very important to me that our government operates as efficiently as possible, while providing quality programs and services that meet the needs of the people of our province," said

Premier Dunderdale. “Re-aligning departments and adjusting ministries to ensure they are best positioned to take on the challenges and opportunities before us is very important.”

To focus on supplying highly educated graduates and skilled workers for a fast-growing economy, a new Department of Advanced Education and Skills is being established. This department incorporates most of the old Department of Human Resources, Labour and Employment, and the Advanced Studies component of the Department of Education. The new department will also house the new Workforce Development Secretariat.

To recognize that the work of the Aboriginal Affairs branch is province-wide in scope and is similar in nature to intergovernmental relations, a merged Secretariat has been established for Intergovernmental and Aboriginal Affairs. To highlight its central coordinating and monitoring role in Labrador, the Labrador Affairs branch will become the Labrador Affairs Office of the Executive Council.

To integrate all business and economic development programs under a single banner, and build on the successes of the two preceding departments, a new Department of Innovation, Business and Rural Development is being established. Most of the programs of the old Department of Business will be merged into the new department, along with all the current programs of the Department of Innovation, Trade and Rural Development. In addition, a new Assistant Deputy Minister of Ocean Technology will be appointed to lead activity related to capitalizing on the province’s incredible strengths and expertise in harsh ocean environments.

To implement a new vision for providing services to citizens and businesses, creating single windows for multiple services, and simplifying how government connects with its clients, the former Department of Government Services is being re-branded as Service Newfoundland and Labrador and the minister is tasked with bringing forth a plan that allows government to achieve its new vision. Given the department’s existing expertise in regulatory processes, the Regulatory Reform unit of the old Department of Business is being moved to Service Newfoundland and Labrador.

The Brand Development Division of the old Department of Business will be moved to the Communications Branch of Executive Council.
